Excerpt: . . . genius, of mercantile enterprise, popular equality and civil power. It is in the schoolhouse that peoples have passed from childhood to manhood, from subordination to independence, from pupilage to mastership. At these fountains we drink the inspiration to great deeds and lofty character, and engender thoughts that ripen into divine philosophies and imperishable literatures. From these science goes forth to marshal her countless utilities, and art to fill her canvas with enduring beauty, and build her temples that teach through the ages. Our own Franklin has said, If a man empties his purse into his head, no one can take it from him. Not even a bold man would dare impeach the practical wisdom of the philosopher on a question so obvious, but his axiom is only half the truth. The investment of capital in knowledge is not simply the safest, but it is the...
