I could see without any trial that there was not much improvement in the pick, but I placed my hand on the lay, and horrors, what a pick! I looked at his arm to see if it was cork, but seeing that it was genuine flesh and blood I came to the conclusion that the nerves and cords in his arm must be paralyzed when he could call that a smooth pick. But let me get back to the question. In the first place if I had been on the section long enough the shoes would not be too far back or forward, but all alike. If I was just starting on a strange section, I would set them gradually as I happened to be called...
