Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Furrier's Friend Adviser on Dressing and Tanning of Fur Skins and Hides Skinning an Animal All small animals open across the hind legs; open the tail, loosen the skin from the legs, cut the paws of the bone but leave it on the skin. Take out the bone of the tail by catching hold of the point of the bone and pulling it out, not the other way, it might tear. Then pull the skin over the body and head leaving the front paws on also ears, eyes and lips and nose. Do not damage any of them; they may be needed. Then pull it over a board according to the shape of the animal. With skins with broad legs such as Foxes just stick some newspaper over the flesh also tail to dry quicker. To prevent the loosening of the hair, turn ears outside the board. Large skins are best opened on the Belly also on front legs; dry in a shed but hang high out of reach of mice, rats and...
